while studying with Ed Owens at his home in Cape Charles, Virginia - we had been returning from town in Ed's auto. Before Ed stopped his car to make a hard-right-turn into his driveway - we looked either way for several blocks on the street for other traffic. The street was empty of all cars. When Ed was only halfway through his turn into his driveway - a $\frac{3}{4}$ ton pickup truck simply "appeared" about 10-15 feet from Ed's auto travelling at a speed of 35-45 miles per hour on a collision course. The driver made no apparent effort to avoid an impact. The $\frac{3}{4}$ ton truck stopped about 4-6 inches from Ed's door - with its driver's head jammed up against the cab roof of Ed's truck. There was no sound of screeching brakes ??? Something "stopped" the truck other than its driver. The $\frac{3}{4}$ ton truck simply drove away after Ed moved into his driveway.
